Basically, I'm trying to describe the different options available to the User at this point in the process. If there's an "Option A", then there must be an "Option B" which will show you the other options available to the User. (B) 2.7 Group Edit Screen – Option B 2.8 Home Screen – Option B ?) The A-Z Index control is great and all, but it seems like it will spend a lot of time getting in the way, potentially obscuring other interface elements but also adding unnecessary clutter. I rather like the idea of hiding this control until the list is scrolled, at which point you could _____ Taken back to Home Screen. fade-in the control, and then after a period of inactivity, fade the control out again. My thinking here is that scrolling the list is a sure sign that the user is looking for someone Ber Are you sure you want to Cancel? who they can't currently see on-screen. Surely it's at this You have created a new Group but have not Christina Aguilera point that the A-Z index control might become useful? Also, Chr yet saved it. If you Cancel now this Group our list isn't just a list, it's an "information centre", very will not be saved. Are you sure? much like a status board – it communicates very useful information about the Contacts currently displayed onscreen. If the A–Z Index control is permanently displayed, the app's ability to communicate this information is compromised because it gets in the way. Isaac Asimov Isaac Asimov 7) The title of the "Home" screen in the screen mock—up above is "All Contacts". Is this confusing? Should it actually be "Home"? The User will probably very quickly "get" that the "Home" screen displays all Contacts, so should we be more consistent and just title this screen "Home"? David Beckham You can only create a new Group by tapping the "Add Group" button which is only displayed on the Home screen, 2.3 Group Edit Screen therefore the Home screen is the screen from where the "Add Group" process starts. This is why Users are returned to the Home screen if they Cancel out of creating a new Ben Affleck When creating a new Group, the group name defaults to "Untitled". We use the checkboxes for the Group Edit Screen, but I don't think we ever really got round to deciding how we denote selection on the "View Screens". Should it be the same checkbox as on the "Edit Screens" — should the list item "row" be subtly highlighted?
